As I try to explain in the Essay posted above this one- the Bible does not mandate economic equality not does it support wealth redistribution by the Government. Hence Christians should support neither. But the latter is well underway in America.

The stories about ObamaCare costs for American families continue to unfold before us. As more people gain access to information about the health plans available to them through ObamaCare, the trite phrase “sticker shock” is heard more often.

We have probably all learned that some of this was to be expected.

After all, the plans will cover pre-existing conditions, spread the costs of maternity across all subscribers where that typically had been assessed to females and families, and premium subsidies are being made available to individuals and families with incomes of up to 400% of the federal poverty level.

Additionally, premium rates cannot be more than three times greater for a 62 year old than for a 22 year old person.

All of this has served to cause significant premium increases.

Many of those who have had health plans in the past are finding their renewal premium amounts significantly higher than before or benefits reduced, or both.

‘Significantly’ as in up to three times, or even more, higher.

But, is there more to this story than simple cost increases coupled with diminished coverage? Is it possible there is something of even more concern for those of us of the conservative persuasion?
